

the hangover reality

BY AROA CABRERA

Yourselves witnessing a war? Impossible, uhm? All these things only happen in poor countries or this is what we think. But that's not true. Who can't tell you that in 2 years your country is going to be in a war or, a pandemic is going to level the world? We don't know.

In the background, we can see a man and a little girl who must be rescued from a war, she may be wounded because she seems sad and also bewildered because she may not know what is happening and why she is in a helicopter and her clothes are dirty so she's a little scared. The man next to her is a soldier that is wearing a camouflage uniform. He may be helping the girl to escape from the war. Also, he's wearing a helmet and a pair of protection goggles for precaution. In the foreground, we can see another soldier that is looking after the baby next to him. He is wearing a camouflage suit too like his mate and a helmet but this one does not wear protection goggles. Next to him we can see a baby that is wounded because he's full of blood and the blanket which is covering him is stained too. This baby could be the brother of the other girl in the helicopter.

This situation makes me feel so sad and sorrowful because the fact that this could happen to me or my beloved ones is a situation that I think I couldn't be prepared for. I hope that one day all these situations will stop and no more wars will destroy so many families. We have to stop that, because this could happen to you too.
